Jews Arrive In Vienna In Rags

The arrival in Vienna of 350 Austrian Jews from Russia gave startling verification of reports of the hard fate of many Jews who fled from Hitler to Russia, reports the New York Times.

The 350 were in a shocking condition. Their clothes were rags. They were half starved. Members of the group said they had been on the way from a Russian work camp at Kazakistan in Central Asia for nearly three months.

They said they had so little food on their trip that they would have starved if the Joint Distribution Committee in Rumania had not learned of their plight and provided food.

When they arrived they were in such a weakened condition that other Jewish refugees in the Rothschild Hospital refugee center gave up their dinner so the newcomers could eat.

The Vienna municipality housed them in various former military barracks. Jewish groups plan special programs of relief because most of them are destitute and many need a long rest or hospitalization.

There have been many reports of similar conditions from Polish Jews who passed through Vienna. Refugees who spent the war period and a good part of the post-war period in Russia were said to have been [illegible] in work camps and used for heavy manual labor. Says DP Neglect Shows Fascism

The Fascist threat to democracy is greater now than at any time since 1932, when Germany and Italy were under its control, O. John Rogge, former United States Assistant Attorney General, said at the Commodore Hotel, at a dinner of the New York and Bronx Physicians division of the United Jewish Appeal of Greater New York campaign for $65,000,000.

Mr. Rogge said that part of the general pattern is the way in which the United States has neglected the Jewish displaced persons in Europe. He said he had inspected displaced persons camps in Germany and that "it seemed as though we were treating the Jews as the Nazis had treated them, except that instead of exterminating them we are allowing them to rot slowly."

The displaced persons should be welcomed in the United States, Mr. Rogge told the 500 doctors, who opened a division campaign for $460,000 to aid the work of the United Jewish Appeal's constituent agencies in providing relief, rehabilitation and resettlement for the 1,500,000 surviving European Jews. "If I were a Jew in Europe today," he said, "I should have a single aim and that is to get out, and I should risk my life doing it."

"We take 1,000 Nazis, call them scientists and transport them to this country," he said. "Yet, I never heard of anyone proposing that we go through the DP camps and select those who could be socially useful and bring them to this country."

Carlos L. Israels, assistant secretary, United Service for New [illegible] said that during [illegible]

Geochemist Was Saved From Nazis

Dr. Victor Moritz Goldschmidt, leading Norwegian geochemist and a pioneer worker in the field of crystal chemistry, died in Oslo. Dr. Goldschmidt had a narrow escape from the Nazis when the latter conquered Norway. He was arrested and was being sent to an extermination camp when he was rescued by the Norwegian underground, spirited to a boat and sent by sea to Sweden.

From Sweden his scientific colleagues arranged air transportation to Scotland and he worked for a time at the Macaulay Institute of Soil Research, Aberdeen. Later in the war he served as a consultant in the laboratories of the Rothamstead Agricultural Experiment Station in England.

He returned to his post as Professor of Mineralogy and Geology and director of the geological museum at the University of Oslo last year in order to direct a newly equipped raw materials laboratory established by the Norwegian Department of Commerce, according to Dr. Lester W. Strock, who was associated with Dr. Goldschmidt abroad for several years.

Dr. Goldschmidt was born in 1888. He was the only son of Dr. Heinrich Goldschmidt, for many years Professor of Physical Chemistry at Oslo. Educated at Oslo and the University of Vienna, he was appointed an amanuensis—a scientific secretary — at the Geological Museum in Oslo, where he was a pupil of the famous geologist and petrologist, W. C. Brogger.

To Give Yiddish Courses At NYCC

The opening of a complete Yiddish library at City College in New York, and the introduction of courses in elementary and advanced Yiddish were announced by Prof. Solomon Liptzin, chairman of the German department at the school. The library, which will contain a collection of rare books, motion pictures and recordings, will be the only one of its kind in the world and will succeed the destroyed collections of Europe as a central repository for material pertaining to Yiddish literature and linguistics.

Already housing more than a thousand volumes, the library is located in the College's Army Hall, 137th Street and Amsterdam Avenue, and is open daily to the general public.

The courses in Yiddish, which are being given in conjunction with the school's Adult Education program, will be opened next month to New York residents. Next fall, they will be made part of the college's regular foreign language curriculum, according to Prof. Liptzin. He adds that this is the first time such courses are being given at an American college or university.

"Of the ten to twelve million Yiddish-speaking Jews in the world before the war," he says, "only four to five million remain. About half of these live in the New York metropolitan area. As a result, the need for Yiddish study on a college level for social workers and others is extremely important. And while Hebrew is offered at other institutions, many of which maintain extensive collec[illegible]

300 Survivors Attend Seder In New York

Recollection of German horror camps filled a small banquet hall at the Hotel Marseilles, Broadway and 103rd Street, New York, when 300 Jews who survived ate the bitter herbs of Passover.

The survivors ate under an American flag at tables covered with azaleas and gleaming white chinaware. At each place was a cellophane-wrapped prayer book for the recital of Haggadah, the story of the Jewish exodus from Egyptian slavery.

The survivors talked to each other mostly in Yiddish, and to reporters in the stumbling, eager English which they are just beginning to learn. All but a few arrived on the transport Marine Marlin from Bremerhaven, Germany.

One harrowing story they had to tell was that of Mrs. Eva Yellina, thirty-one, formerly an operatic soprano of Kaunas, Lithuania.

The Nazis put Mrs. Yellina in a gas chamber a few days before Passover in 1945. As the gas filled the chamber, she called out to the guards that it was coming in too slowly. She was dragged out and beaten for voicing this criticism. Then she was sent to be shot.

As she faced the firing squad, she chanted "Eli, Eli", whose words are "Oh, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" An S.S. officer stayed her execution. Two

A.M.G. Reports German Hatred Strong

Six out of every ten Germans in the American zone of Germany are still "deeply imbued" with strong anti-Semitic feelings, according to an official American Military Government report.

The report made by Opinion Surveys Headquarters, indicated that there had been a slight increase in anti-Semitism during the past year.

More than 3,000 interviews, conducted by the agency's personnel, also disclosed that only two per cent of the population opposes race hatred in any positive sense.

The report held a gloomy view of the prospects of increasing this small fraction, saying:

"Possibly some reduction in anti-Semitism can be achieved within a generation if there is a positive program of organized and directed effort, but complete elimination is a very long-range problem, likely to take generations."

The survey showed that eighteen per cent of Germans are rabid anti-Semites. These still want restricted eating places, despise Germans for marrying "non-Aryans", and recommend emigration to Palestine.

An additional twenty per cent probably would not object to overt actions against Jews. Another twenty per cent rationalize overt hostility, which together with nationalistic-minded Germans add up to the fact that "there are eight in under Sec[illegible] for an end [illegible] the kind of diplomacy that "wants to push populations out of one country for the benefit of another", at a luncheon of the American Federation of International Institutes in the St. Moritz Hotel, in New York.

Mr. Berle urged support of a bill, drawn up by former Immigration Commissioner Earl G. Harrison to be introduced into Congress, which would permit 400,000 displaced persons to enter the United States over a four or five year period, in addition to those who immigrate under the quota laws.

If the United States does nothing for the displaced persons, nothing will be done by any nation, Mr. Berle said. The U.S. can admit the proposed number by proper handling of the immigration laws, he held, since under present regulations 2,000,000 would have been permitted entry since 1930, although fewer than 600,000 arrived.

Richard C. Raymond, adviser on displaced persons to the Department of State, told the 200 delegates that the department estimates that there are now 1,250,000 refugees and displaced persons scattered throughout the world, many of them outside of camps.

"We are concerned about a lot of false propaganda that is going around about the displaced persons," he said. "There is so much of it that there almost seems to be a campaign behind it."

The first of these false rumors is that all displaced persons are "riffraff", he said, whereas in fact there are among them an unusually large number of professional men and women and skilled craftsmen. Similarly, all displaced persons are incorrectly assumed to be Jews, and all Jews and displaced persons are called Communists, he declared.

"Only about 20 per cent of the displaced persons are Jews," Mr. Raymond went on, "and the charge of Communism is an obvious slander."

If the International Refugee Organization is not activated, the displaced persons will lose their remaining hope for any kind of normal life, and are "really going to be abandoned," he said. The IRO cannot come into being until fifteen contributing nations have approved it, he explained, adding that ten nations have signed provisionally, of which the United States is one.

State Industrial Commissioner Edward Corsi, president of the federation, said that a recent State Department of Labor survey showed that New York could absorb 50,000 displaced persons without "interfering in the least with the labor market."

having a tremendous psychological uplift on the morale of the hundred thousand remaining Jewish displaced persons in the American Zone in Germany "who have begun to realize that their speech, literature and folklore were not completely wiped out by the Nazis but are being preserved at one of the largest colleges in the United States."

He declares that a knowledge of Yiddish is indispensable for workers attached to welfare agencies in New York, which are directing the cultural and educational activities of displaced persons in Germany whose only means of communication is Yiddish.

Because of the novel character of the college's new Yiddish courses, Prof. Liptzin says that new methods of instruction will have to be introduced. These will include the use of recordings by outstanding actors of the Yiddish stage and screen to be used as standards for pronunciation as well as the showing of motion pictures. The library, he adds, already has a collection of every Yiddish motion picture ever filmed, both here and abroad. This collection "is now invaluable inasmuch as it is improbable that, with the destruction of the Jewish community in Europe, Yiddish films will ever be produced again."

The courses in Yiddish language will be given by Dr. Nathan Susskind of the College's German department, while Prof. Liptzin will conduct the classes in literature. Prof. Liptzin, who is the author of "Germany's Stepchildren," "Lyric Pioneers of Modern Germany" and a biography of Arthur Schnitzler, says that since Yiddish is a Germanic tongue, it was decided to keep the courses part of the regular German department curriculum.

Yiddish, he says, is now considered a standard language, whose evolution corresponds closely to the history of European Jewry for the last thousand years. It originated around 1,000 A.D. in the Rhine basin where Jews who had previously spoken Old French, took over the German language of that period. When they migrated to Eastern Europe, the language was carried with them and during the great Jewish migration of the 1880's, Yiddish was spread throughout almost every country in the world.

The idea of offering Yiddish courses at City College and the installation of the library originated with Prof. Liptzin in the summer of 1946. The library was started with a contribution of a hundred volumes from I. L. Stern, of Chicago. Prof. Liptzin says that following this initial gift, books be-

● CANADIAN JEWISH CONGRESS: More than 400 delegates and additional hundreds of guests are expected to attend the seventh plenary session of the Canadian Jewish Congress in Montreal on the evening of May 31. The conference, which is the first since early in 1945, will continue until June 2, with sessions and the dinners at the Mount Royal Hotel. Exhibits of various phases of Jewish life throughout the world are being planned. Elections of delegates are going on throughout the Dominion, in synagogues, social groups, schools, labour unions, philanthropic bodies, welfare funds, Zionist organizations, the press, mutual benefit groups, Old Country associations, etc. In addition, forty-three delegates at large will be chosen at a public meeting of contributors and other members of the community. Election committee: Harold Lande, chairman; Samuel Harvey, S. D. Cohen. Samuel Bronfman, of Montreal, is national president. British amphibious army vessels in the occupation zone of Germany were pressed into service to enable Jewish refugees to observe the Passover, according to a report received by the Congress from its overseas relief worker, Rabbi Jacob Eisen, of Edmonton, formerly squadron leader with the R.C.A.F. Ice had broken all the bridges across the Weser River, of Pied Piper fame, cutting off Jewish refugees in Bremen from the relief storehouses where Passover matzohs and other food shipped through the Mo'esa Chittin Fund in Canada and the United States had been stored. The army permitted loaded trucks to board the amphibious vessels, thus enabling the food to reach some 700 Jewish emigrants awaiting transportation at Breman for the United States. The traditional Passover Seder service was conducted with full ceremony by Rabbi Eisen.

LEVINE-WHITE

The marriage of Shirley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. White, 835 Dollard Avenue, to Jack Levine, son of Mrs. I. Levine, 4607 Marquette Street, took place at Chevra Kadisha Synagogue, on February 23, at half-past twelve o'clock, Dr. C. N. Denburg, Rabbi, officiating, assisted by Cantor A. Matta. Given in marriage by her parents, the bride wore a floor-length gown of baby pink Swiss embroidered taffeta, fashioned with a low neckline, short puffed sleeves, fitted bodice, and a full skirt with a bustle at the back. Her pink tulle illusion veil was arranged with a headdress of pink rose petals and rosettes, and she carried a cascade bouquet of white Calla lilies. Miss Molly White, as maid of honor for her sister, wore a greige street-length dress, a pink and blue flowered hat, with blue veiling, and long blue gloves, and carried a cascade of Talisman roses. Elaine White, aged two and a half years, niece of the bride, as flower girl, wore a pink taffeta smocked dress, and carried a nosegay of rosebuds. Abe Averson was best man, and Michael White, nephew of the bride, was page boy. Mixed spring flowers, ferns, and candelabra with lighted candles decorated the altar. Mrs. White, mother of the bride, wore a teal-blue crepe dress, a matching hat with pink flowers, and a corsage of pink carnations. Mrs. H. Levine, sister-in-law of the groom, wore a street-length dress of grey crepe, and a fuchsia-colored hat, long gloves of the same color, and a corsage of Talisman roses. The bride and groom went on a two-week honeymoon to New York, the bride travelling in a light-blue wool dress, a blue flowered hat, black accessories, and a grey lamb coat, with an orchid corsage. Out-of-town guests were: Mr. and Mrs. A. Kaufman, of New York; David Brown and daughter, Lyla, of Stamford, Conn.; and Miss Shirley Samuel, of Toronto, Ont.

STEINROUSE-DAVIS

The marriage of Tobie Thelma, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. I. Davis, Esplanade Avenue, to Herbert, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Steinhouse, Circle Road, took place on Sunday, March 30, at twelve o'clock noon, at the home of the groom's parents, Rabbi W. Shuchat officiating. The [illegible] Levin, sister of the [illegible] Mrs. Joshua Levin, de l'Epee Avenue, to Abe Pinsky, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Pinsky, Querbes Avenue, took place on March 16, at Adath Israel Synagogue, Rabbi Charles Bender, Cantor E. Goldberger, and Reverend M. Mandelcorn officiating. The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of ivory-white duchess satin designed with a sweetheart neckline and bodice of appliqued seed-pearl beads, leg-of-mutton sleeves coming to points over the wrists, and full skirt gathered at the waist, with bustle effect at the back ending in a long sweeping train. Her veil of tulle illusion was held in place by a coronet of pearl beads fashioned into a lace-like pattern, and she carried white orchids and streamers of bouvardia on a white prayer book. Miss Gloria Rhoda Levin, sister of the bride, as maid of honor, wore a gown of pale peach-colored satin embroidered with seed pearl beads, and a matching open-crowned picture hat and gloves, and carried a round bouquet of blue irises. The bridesmaids, Miss Barbara Emelia Levin, sister of the bride, and Miss Lila Pinsky, cousin of the bridegroom, were dressed alike in pale blue taffeta, with coronets of pale blue tulle caught with forget-me-nots, and gloves of pale blue tulle, and carried nosegays of mixed flowers. Judith Linda Blauer, niece of the bridegroom, as flower girl, was in a long smocked pink faille dress, with matching bonnet, and carried a nosegay of variegated flowers. Dr. Melvin M. Maisn was best man for his cousin. The ushers were: Philip Berman, Murray Diamond, Fred Dermer, Seymour Frank, Norman Greenspon, Richard Herson, Lawrence Popliger, and Moe J. Frupas. Miss Edith Daniels, cousin of the bridegroom, sang "Because". The synagogue was decorated with spring flowers and candelabra. The reception took place in the hall where a variety of spring flowers, and candles, decorated each table. The bridal couple left by motor for New York, Florida, and Cuba, the bride travelling in a black woollen suit, coat of silver-blue muskrat, and a white felt hat, trimmed with flowers. They will live at 5552 Snowdon Avenue. The bridegroom is a graduate of Queen's University.

OPERATION AGAINST JEWS

Military operations in Palestine were carried out during the last week-end of June, 1946. They were then directed against the Hagana; and against the Palmach, which is the well-trained spearhead of the Hagana. What happened last time?

It was during the afternoon of a very hot Friday that dozens of Commanding Officers issued their orders for the operation—and very strange orders they were. Army officers, used to the issuing of orders against the Germans or the Japanese, were at a loss on this occasion. The set formula which had been battered into them at Staff Colleges didn't seem to apply very accurately in this particular instance. They came unstuck at the very beginning of their orders, under the headings of Information and Intention. "Information about our own troops"—yes, that was all right. But, "Information about the enemy"—this was very hard. Technically, there was no enemy. And "Intention"? Well, it was generally considered that the operation was to be directed against the Hagana; and I use the phrase "generally considered" because this aspect of the business was in most cases left very vague. Remarks were made about "hoping to strike at Hagana and thus drive the thin end of a wedge between the moderates and the extremists." But they were only remarks; if any direct written orders were ever issued on this operation then they were carefully concealed.

This was very important. It meant that the two Divisions of troops who were in Palestine at the time knew very little about the job they were doing. They left their camps in the early hours of a Saturday morning, fully armed, knowing that they were to search Jewish settlements. But they did not know why. And, later on, they pushed young male Jews into wire cages at the orders of their officers. They did not know who these men were or what they had done; they thought (in their ignorance they could hardly be expected to think otherwise) that these were the men who had blown up railway trains, who had killed British soldiers. But were they? The officers knew a little more than this; they knew that these men were supposed to be on a certain mysterious Black List.

All right then, there was a Black List. But it wasn't very helpful; imagine the absurdity of looking for a man called, let us say, Israel Cohen, who was aged 32 and was last seen in Tel Aviv! It was rather like looking for a Joe Smith, aged 43, and last seen in Burton-on-Trent. I do not know how many Israel Cohens were taken away from their settlements during those days. Or if the "wanted" Israel Cohen was actually found, then what? He was a member of Hagana. Two days after the end of these operations, I was speaking to a Jewish District Officer; he opened the window of his room and spread out his arm in a wide semi-circle that embraced the whole valley outside and he said, quietly: "You know, all the men of this valley are active members of Hagana. One hundred per cent." Then he smiled. At that time about two thousand Jewish males were in concentration camps, members of Hagana. Yet of those who remained in the settlements, one hundred per cent were active members of Hagana and made no attempt to conceal it.

But then, it will be said, important discoveries were made during that week-end. Yes; map-making machines were found, and apparatus that had been used to teach wireless signalling to small children, and training pamphlets and . . . and there was the arms dump at Mescheq Yagur. The operations were against persons and were not a search for things like this, but even so certain things were found. The British soldiers thought that important things were discovered, and the expensive picture papers showed a photograph of General Barker entering an arms cache. This was all very well at the time, but even then it prompted certain questions. The Jewish press said quite cheerfully that of course there were arms caches in Palestine; they had been made during the war with the full approval of the British military authorities. In fact, if certain sections of the Jewish press were to be believed, the soldiers had merely discovered something about which the British authorities already had full information. The soldier in July 1946 was greatly puzzled by the claims of the Jewish press. Was he helping to exterminate terrorism or was he jailing his allies?

The actual operation was unpleasant. At four o'clock on the morning of the Jewish Sabbath a young girl left her bungalow to see to the cattle. There were movements in the bushes outside the wire perimeter of her settlement. As the light increased she saw khaki soldiers. A complete battalion of them. She ran back, and presently the whole settlement was a buzz of voices. The Commanding Officer went quietly to the locked gate and summoned the leading villager. He had come, he said, to search for certain people. If the villagers co-operated there would be no bloodshed. His men would search the houses, take the names of all the villagers, and go away quietly. The leader of the settlement would enter each house with one of the army officers, and a police officer would enter also. The troops would enter the settlement but would not enter the houses. And so on. And if the troops were not allowed to enter peacefully — well, there were Bren carriers to push down the gate.

The Jews had no alternative. On the first day, the Sabbath, they were taken by surprise, but on the second and third days they were prepared. So the number of Black Listed men who were actually found decreased from day to day. They played for time, pretended that the keys to the gate had been lost, or that it was impossible to give an answer to the British commander without first summoning the council of villagers. And so on. It was a farce that became tedious with repetition. So did the continual answer to the question, "Your name please" — "I am a Jew from Palestine." And the answer to that? "Put him in the cage, Sergeant Major. How the devil do I know if he's on the list or not if the damned fellow won't give his name?" True, of course, but it merely filled the cages with young men whose only crime was a mixture of national feeling and anger at being disturbed. It was, as I say, a farce.

But not always a farce. There were men who came for interrogation whose arms were branded with the numbers which they'd received in Nazi concentration camps. "That," said the realistic police officer, "is a red herring. Don't get sentimental about it, old man." And their ages? Well, after a few years in a concentration camp and another year and a half of travel across Europe a man's age becomes deceptive. "Israel Cohen, aged 32, last seen. . . ." The man might well look a good fifty or more.

Late on the first evening, as the sun was setting, I was standing with a corporal on the grass just inside a settlement gate. Outside there was a cage which contained twenty or thirty Jews, singing national songs and guarded by the Pioneer Sergeant. The search of this particular village was almost complete. The troops were filing out into the road — smartly, to show just how well disciplined they were; and they were well disciplined too, or there would have been much unpleasantness. A group of young Jewish girls gathered beside us. The troops left, and we turned to go out ourselves. A girl with tears streaming down her cheeks spat into our faces. "You are worse than the Nazis," she said. We turned away. It is not true, but that she should feel it shows that something has gone wrong.

Did the operations succeed? They showed, we were told, that the British forces in Palestine could now take the initiative. Before this week-end all the initiative had come from the terrorists. And so the British army in Palestine, 100,000 strong, took action against the Hagana. From all over the country Jews were brought into concentration camps in army lorries. They were held there for many weeks without trial. Then they were released — almost all of them.

What was achieved. Anything or nothing?

CLASS IN COOKERY

PASSOVER SPONGE CAKE

twelve eggs, separated
one cup sugar
pinch of salt
grated rind of one lemon
one cup cake meal

Beat egg-yolks with sugar until soft and fluffy. Beat egg-whites separately, until very stiff, and fold into egg-yolk mixture. Add grated rind of lemon, and then the sifted cake meal, mixing very carefully. Pour into a greased pan, and bake in a 350-degree oven for one hour, taking care not to open oven door during baking, otherwise cake will fall.

Mrs. S. Shiff,
1840 Van Horne Avenue, Montreal.

PASSOVER BAGLE

Combine one glass of chicken fat with three glasses of water, and boil. When it comes to a boil, remove from stove, and add matzoh meal, enough to make a thick paste. When cool, mash thoroughly, so that there are no lumps. Then add eggs, dropping in an egg at a time, until the dough is of the consistency to be rolled in the hands. Use salt and pepper to taste, or sugar (optional). Shape like doughnuts, with a hole in the middle, and bake in a greased pan, in a 400-degree oven, for half an hour. Then bake an additional fifteen minutes in 325-degree oven.

The Fine Passover Holiday

By Beatrice Dental, 32 Lauder Avenue, Toronto

Every year at this time my Mother goes about her household tasks with a faint smile. Only during this season is she more cheerful at work. Truly, her strength seems to be renewed. If there is no work to be done, she looks for it . . . a cake to bake, socks to darn . . . Never can she sit idle. A real balbusta; that's my Mother! With a little more grey in her black hair, another wrinkle, — older perhaps, but always dearer than yesterday.

Why is she so happy when Pesach comes? Because this festival brings the Spring, and in it's wake the wonderful sunshine, fresh clean air, with the trees no longer naked, and flowers rare and fragrant. Besides, it is the only time during the year when all the relatives are together, except on rare occasions, and this gives much pleasure.

In preparation for the event the floors are waxed and polished until they shine like gold. Believe me, you can break your neck on those floors! But to my mother, with the coming of Passover it is as if written in the Holy Scroll. It must be so! Nowadays it seems that a woman's character is judged by her hardwood floors. Nu? What can you say to that?

Soon the storm windows are put into the cellar; by some strange coincidence, in the same place where my Mother has put our Passover order. Who can resist such a temptation? And I notice that the macaroons stick to the paper even more than last year's. Tsk! Tsk! That Mother of mine is like Einstein! Everything she knows!

But I also am not without wisdom, and quickly I offer to hang the freshly starched curtains. I set my hand to the task of cleaning windows, while from my apron pocket I take the tsuckerkies, the Russian name for bon-bons, strictly kosher for Passover.

Everything gives one pleasure! Even washing the special set of dishes carefully wrapped in the Jewish Review. For, as my Father has said again and again, "Why should such holy dishes be preserved in Goyisha newspapers?"

My hands covered with kosher soap, I comment on the lovely floral pattern of these dishes, as though seeing them for the first time. Then, as is my custom, I pretend to discover among those dusty old newspapers, a recipe I had been loking for, telling of how to make a delicious, Pesachdicka gogel-mogel. I then repeat the recipe with a great flourish of my best Yiddisha accent. Never does my mother tire of hearing this yearly joke.

Not in all the Land of Israel are there pots mit pans mit roasters as in this house! I swear that the smallest is yet so large, one could roast enough chicken to feed all the Shomerim in Palestine! (With a second helping of kishke.)

All of a sudden my Father yells, "Who, please answer me, wrapped last year the wine glasses? There's a chometz glass areingemisht!"

Who indeed? He wrapped them himself; but such things, one knows, are better left unsaid. My Mother and I smile at each other knowingly while Father continues to shout at nobody in particular. In a moment I see his bright eyes twinkling and inside I am happy!

It is easy to tell that already he thinks of Friday, the First Seder. Judging from the look of ecstasy on his face, I sense that he smells the fluffy kneidlach. For some reason or other I have always called them kinderlach! Perhaps it is the way they bob up and down as they cook, like little children at play! Pardon me for laughing, but at this moment I happened to remember the way my Father has of shouting his perpetual, "S'felt zalts!"

Whenever my Father sits quietly at the head of the table, eating his dinner without comment, I know that he is upset about something he has read. When in that particular mood, he has a comical habit of moving everything within his reach to other parts of the table. While doing this, the salt shakers are upset. It never fails! My brother and I are busy throwing salt over our left shoulders, a precaution always taken to avoid having arguments.

But if one should ask what upset my Father so, I must tell you that another (so-called) illegal ghost ship with its burden of homeless Jews, was caught off the coast of Haifa where it was unsuccessful in evading the British blockade. The desolate Cyprus Detention Camp like the ghettos of yore, have become the "alien" home of our Jewish brothers.

This brother of mine, you see, I was about to tell you that to him the best part of Pesach is the special latkes, made from cake meal and beaten eggs, and sprinkled with sugar. He devours them by the dozen swallowing each, all in one piece. Our Mother stands beside the stove turning the pancakes and laughing as she watches him. To her everything is a joke. But after all, he is an only son.

That good-for-nothing pancake-eater must have a rubber stomach. However, he is so thin it would surprise you. You may think it is very comical when I relate a certain misfortune that happened to my brother, and you are entitled to laugh if you wish. But believe me it was no laughing matter.

Some time ago, at a cousin's wedding, all gathered at the bride's home to clink their glasses of shnaps and wish everybody in the vicinity, "Mazeltof, zoll es zein mit glick."

All of a sudden, my uncle asks to see his favourite nephew. He was nowhere to be found! Everywhere we looked, inside, outside, upstairs, downstairs. He had disappeared! No mention of this was made to my Mother, and we comforted ourselves that he would turn up when the time came to leave for the wedding.

We could not go without him for he was an usher in the ceremony; yet, only a half hour was left and still he was missing. The guests went to get their hats and coats and what do you think? It was not until only one coat remained, that my poor brother was found. Have you ever heard of such a thing? To tell you the truth, if he stood facing Jerusalem, from Rosh Hashonah to Yom Kippur, he would not cast a shadow over one.

On the Passover night different from all other nights, there are thirty of us altogether, sitting around the table. We listen as my Father sings again the story commemorating the Exodus of our ancestors, whom the Lord our God delivered out of the house of bondage.

With holy thoughts we silently crumble the matzos. The peppery scent of gefilte fish, tzimes, and bitter herbs, is wonderful. Carefully we sip the sweet, red wine, for even our clothes are Pesachdick! We are content! Once again is it Passover, and, thank God, we are alive!

Sitting with my relatives, a fligel in one hand and a fork in the other, miraculously I feel the spirit of Elijah the Prophet enter my soul. Together we slip from the table, unnoticed. And where do we go, you ask? Believe it or not, we steal into Jewish homes all over the world, and become their silent guests. Can you imagine, what a wonderful feeling it is, to know that at this hour in many little towns on the face of the earth, Jewish families both rich and poor, from the wisest sage to the most humble peasant, become solemnly united.

To each Jew the "Feast of Unleavened Bread" has its own deep meaning. Everyone sees a special significance in this holiday, and how else can it be? There are no two people alike anywhere in the world. Not even in the Land of Israel! But each rejoices and wishes a happy holiday for all the others who are asking the same questions and singing the same melodies.

days later the camp was liberated. Her husband and child already had been cremated.

Mrs. Yellina hopes to continue her career, and said she aspires to the Metropolitan Opera Company. She is living at 486 Crown Street, Brooklyn.

Most of the other survivors are at the Hotel Marseilles, awaiting resettlement in factories and on farms throughout the U.S. by the United Service for New Americans, Inc., 15 Park Row.

New York is a wonderful place, the new arrivals agreed. "It's very good, very good, very good," Felwish Lieber, of Zablotov, Galicia, exclaimed in Yiddish. "I've seen the whole city already and it's wonderful. It is a city of liberty."

Among the guests at the Seder dinner were Benjamin Cohen, of Chile, assistant secretary of the department of public information of the United Nations, and Dr. Samuel McCrea Cavert, general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. The service was conducted by Commander Joshua L. Goldberg, acting district chaplain of the 3rd Naval District.

Wine was drunk during and after the dinner, Commander Goldberg explained, "to gladden the heart of man."

Tailored enough to be trim, fashioned enough to be flatteringly feminine. This is the news on the perfect shirt which the gals are all looking for come Spring, come the suit for Spring. The shirt "It's a Duchess 400" is now on the market. Its cut is a complement to the feminine figure, just as neat, yet far more charming than the strictly man-tailored shirt, which the fashionists find too severe today. It is a shirt divinely easy to put on, with a three button opening plus a tiny button at the waist line, which keeps it perfectly in place, tucked into the skirt or under the jacket. The shoulders are beautifully square, generously padded, the sleeves are ample, with a two button cuff. It has a neat patch pocket. The Duchess "400" shirt is destined to be a best seller all the year round, as a classic. Retailers will be kept supplied with a steady flow of this merchandise. Fabrics are to be of the best, starting with beautiful Celanese crepes, proceeding to the finest that the market has to offer, at all times. We predict fashion fame for this excellent and necessary classic. It is a Duchess "400" made by The Canadian Converters' Company Limited, Est. 1859.

Commentaries

By Dr. Harry J. Stern, Rabbi

On Immortality

At the Spring season of the year when all of nature undergoes an awakening, man through the ages has naturally reflected on life after death. Many are the arguments that have been advanced in support of life beyond the grave. Theology, philosophy and science have all contributed their share.

William James, who scientifically sought to uncover the mystery of the beyond wrote after a quarter of a century of labor: "I am theoretically no further than I was at the beginning; and I confess that at times I have been tempted to believe that the Creator has eternally intended this department of nature to remain 'baffling' to prompt our curiosities and hopes and suspicions, all in equal measure."

Many there are in the world who have no belief regarding life beyond. They rightly point out that the three methods of conquering death, the religious, philosophic, and scientific, have not produced valid convictions in this regard.

The question arises: how can man win victory over death? And the answer is put this way: Man becomes immortal even before death when he links his life with eternal realities. When man thinks of life in moral and spiritual terms he takes on eternity. Thus if we wish to live before death and beyond death we must seek to identify our lives with the ideals of Truth, Beauty, and Goodness of which God is the symbol.

Eternal life for modern man refers to quality of life rather than to timeliness, rather than to duration. To be immortal is to reach out for the imperishable things.

In our synagogues on the concluding day of Passover we observe the Yizkor and recall our beloved dead who have answered the divine summons. Their qualities that are timeless and not timely we cherish most. They live for us through their love and tenderness and undying devotion. If because of them we pursue the lofty and the noble they indeed live again and we in turn help to assure their immortality.

"They are not dead who live
In hearts they leave behind.
In those whom they have blessed
They live a life again,
And still live through the years
Eternal life, and grow
Each day more beautiful,
As time declares their good,
Forgets the rest, and proves
Their Immortality."

ten Germans who, at best, would offer feeble resistance to any such action."

Among the conclusions the report arrived at were that women were much more prejudiced than men. Germans of Protestant background tend to be more prejudiced than Catholics. But in both groups those who attend church regularly are more prone to anti-Semitism than those lax in attendance.

In every sphere of activity, educated persons displayed relatively less prejudice. While this fact points a way to combat anti-Semitism, the report emphasized that any action must be a long-term positive program if success was to be achieved.

Until now it has concerned itself with Hebrew only."

CONGRESS PROTESTS MONTREAL STAR REPORT ON IMMIGRATION

The Canadian Jewish Congress has protested against the circulation of rumours to the effect that many Canadians have written to the government objecting to the proposed admission of Jewish immigrants. A press dispatch in the Montreal Daily Star stated, without giving a source, that "the sub-committee of the Cabinet, which has been studying the subject, has been flooded with mail. What has caused some real concern is a strain of anti-Semitism running through the mail even from those normally referred to as liberals who are in favour of increased immigration. It has been expected that there would be a certain opposition to migration of displaced persons to Canada. It has not been expected that it would reach the proportions it has or that the opposition would be to persons of the Jewish race who had suffered under Hitler."

In a telegram to the Honourable J. A. Glen, Minister of Mines and Resources in whose department the Immigration Branch functions, the Congress stated: "The Canadian Jewish community is deeply shocked that such a dispatch involving the sub-committee of the Cabinet should appear in a metropolitan newspaper. The situation is more aggravated by the fact that obviously there is no truth in the statements. We have seen evidence of your policy to deny from time to time unauthorized statements as to immigration, particularly when the government was involved. We feel that the present situation calls for an immediate and unequivocal public denial."

The telegram was signed by Joseph H. Fine, chairman of the Joint Public Relations Committee in Eastern Canada.

JOURNEY TO AFRICA FROM A LITHUANIAN VILLAGE

On the morning that we were to leave for Africa I visited for the last time the cornfield on the outskirts of our East European village adjacent to the Christian cemetery. (Jews and Christians must remain separate not only for a lifetime, but for an eternity.) For reasons that I find difficult to explain even now, this stretch of land held me spellbound by the magic which it seemed to diffuse, and the memory of it has never left me. It was the one secret that I withheld from everyone, even from S——, who was my mentor in all things and to whom I entrusted all my most intimate thoughts.

It was not the love of Nature that was stirring within me, but something very much deeper and more remote. For what could Nature mean to me, who had beheld the splendid vision of Heaven with flaming archangels wheeling through the firmament? What significance could any giant tree have beside those majestic figures striding through the Talmud, defying the Romans and the Inquisitors, and serving God?

The page of the Talmud was a laid-out garden for me and the words flowers of transcendent beauty. And yet this field wove a spell about me which asserted itself against all this. I see it clearly now —a series of undulations culminating in a gentle acclivity surmounted by a cottage where a shepherd dwelt. Beyond, all was mystery, and it remains so to this day.

The magic of this landscape was most potent in a nocturnal setting — peasant women on their way home in the dusk singing harmonies fraught with the sadness of the Slav. But even more in accord with the scene before me was that music which I heard when a street performer owning a flute and a monkey once came to our village. All the tunes he played were in the mood of allegretto, and the monkey would perform with a dance and a somersault. But in spite of the concert with an elusive melody that somehow spoke of the same evanescent sadness, distant in time and space, as that field by the cemetery. The monkey sat glumly on his shoulder while he played, for this was no dance tune.

When the distant light in the shepherd's cottage appeared I would quickly hasten home, for I knew that night with its terrors was approaching.

That last morning in the village I stood and gazed with deep feeling for a long time on that field which I would never see again— Africa lay in the opposite direction.

As I write these lines thirty years later, a heavy gloom descends over me at the thought that the cemetery has spread towards the shepherd's cottage, and that death has assumed dominion over the scene of my dreams.

We were leaving behind the Lithuanian village and its squalor, with our destination the land where, so it was said, the streets were paved with gold and we would dwell in a palace with marble halls. For a whole week I had been making a close reconnaissance of the house of Velva, the richest man in the village, so as in some measure to concretise the wild thrills coursing through my brain.

The social contrast between my past and my future, as I conceived it then, was piquantly illustrated for me when the thirteen-year-old son of the transport driver, who was taking us to the nearest railway station ten versts away, turned to me and said, as the waggon rumbled over the cobble stones of the market place: "When you come to South Africa, remember that you must not wipe your nose on your sleeve" — aesthetic dynamite from the lips of the untutored.

Soon we were on the edge of the village, where stood the ruins of the house of a Lithuanian Socialist destroyed by the cannon-fire of a Cossack punitive expedition which passed through our village on the way to the Baltic after the abortive 1905 revolution. To be a Socialist in Tsarist Russia was a more hazardous undertaking than in the democratic Anglo-Saxon countries. Such was the pall of mysticism which hung thickly over our village that the Talmudists in the theological seminary remained indifferent to the wild sweep of the Cossack squadron, so I was told, and continued undisturbed along their mystic labyrinths — it was the measure of their contempt for politics, even when uttered from the mouth of a cannon.

Then we arrived at the station with our baggage, about six hours early. Tears of emotion well up within me when I recall the thrill of that first train journey as I sped through field and forest to a new life. It was marred only by one incident: the train window through which I was seeing the new world unfold itself came crashing down on my fingers. That is life— windows crashing down on your fingers unexpectedly. Four years later when I heard of the 1917 Russian Revolution, my mind went back to that train window and I was gratified to learn that these Czarist incompetents had crashed to earth — and then I also thought how the Jews and others were going to be free.

The last scene I beheld on that never-to-be-forgotten day was at a junction on the way to Libau, Radvilishik by the name. It was in the early hours of the morning that we waited there to change trains. The waiting room in which my brother and sister and I huddled round my mother was packed with long-bearded peasants sipping tea that endlessly flowed from copper samovars. But what engaged my attention most was the dazzling illumination—the brightest gaslight—such as we had never seen in our village. At that moment it certainly looked as though things were always going to be very bright.

Finally, we arrived in the Baltic port of Libau, where we were lodged in an immigrants' dosshouse while I was having my trachoma cured—the first encumbrance on the way to the golden fleece. To determine the order in which we were to be attended by the doctor, numbered tins discs were placed on a hook, one of which each [illegible] patient took off as he arrived at the hospital. In this way I learned a great deal about numerals, the way the children do nowadays from finely-coloured picture books.

As month followed month my mother, exasperated by the delay, begged the doctor to do what he could to hasten our departure. He was not unsympathetic, and he quoted to her the story of the one rotten apple spoiling a whole consignment. They are fine, these Aesopian tales, but my mother desperately wanted to rejoin her man, whom she had not seen for eight dreary years.

My trachoma cured, we were again on our way. Soon we passed through Kiel Canal, which was just being completed. The lights of Kiel, in the distance fascinated me — distant lights are very fascinating. Then we entered the North Sea. It was stormy and choppy, the ship, a very light one, pitching and rolling so that I did not know sea from sky.

After five days we could discern the outline of London on the horizon. As we approached the port, swarming with little ships and big ships, my mother, to be on the safe side, instructed us to pour into our eyes a few drops of the medicine we had used for the treatment of the trachoma in Libau, as in a few minutes the London medical authorities were to examine us for contagious diseases. As I was still not entirely cured of the trachoma, we were ordered to be sent back by the same ship to Libau for further treatment.

All the other passengers disembarked in haste and we remained alone on this ship. To make sure that we did not escape or throw ourselves overboard out of desperation, we were sent below deck just about sunset to be locked up. It was like the lid of a coffin closing on us when the hatches were battened down and we were left to ourselves and the vomit of the sea-sick passengers who had departed. For supper that night they did not serve us with that herring and potatoes which was the unvaried fare during the whole voyage. Whether it was out of compassion or according to regulation, they gave us eggs, butter and a whole leg of other delicacies that made me dream once more of what awaited me in the fair land of Africa. It is a fine human tradition, this deference to those who are condemned.

I have described this ship we were in as small. But it looked inordinately big when we had it all to ourselves.

But we were not sent back just then. Our circumstance was brought to the knowledge of certain influential Jews whose business it was to see immigrants through their troubles. We were allowed to leave the boat on condition that I was to be quarantined in a room on the top floor of the London immigrants' shelter. This London set-up, maintained by the Jewish community, was certainly an improvement on the Libau one. I suppose it reflected the financial dominance of the British Empire, of which the Jews as usual took their fair share. But it seems they were not prosperous enough to supply us with a conveyance, when we had to interview certain people at the other end of the town, so we were all marched off — the janitor leading the way — to put our case before a certain Jewish Alderman.

We must have appeared as a procession of the damned in our motley assortment of clothes and colours as we tramped flat-footedly across one of the busiest of the Thames bridges.

Most of the Londoners passed us by with what appeared as a kind and compassionate look; others looked down on us contemptuously in the way people with an empire look down on people without one. One girl, I remember it well, unable to restrain herself at the sight of this harlequinade, guffawed loudly. But my mother kept on her course steadfast and unruffled. They are strong these Jewish women—as strong as the girders of the London bridge and the bonds holding the Empire together.
